NEW DELHI

morningstandard in the sundaystandard com

The reason why people like Swaraag today is because we deliver music from various genres while staying true to their origin.

> Pratap Singh Nirwan, Founder, Swaraag

Changing scenario

Thanks to the increasing use of digital music and recorded tracks, people are forgetting the sounds of instruments. And, because of this very reason, the life of today's songs is extremely short, unlike the classic Bollywood songs.

STAYING TRUE TO THEIR MUSIC

Formed in 2014, Jaipur-based band, Swaraag, is known for fusing Indian and Western instruments

ANGELA PALJOR

rom tabla to drums, sitar to acoustic guitar, traditional Rajasthani morchang to saxophone, the band Swaraag creates fusion musion from a jugalbandi of Indian and Western instruments. Formed in 2014, the Jaipur-based ensemble brings forth the traditional Rajasthani renditions amalgamated with modern instruments. In Delhi for a corporate event, founder Pratap Singh Nirwan tells us about the band's journey and upcoming plans. Excerpts:

How was Swaraag formed? We began as an instrumental band, but soon realised that people loved vocals more than instrumental music. So, we started looking for a vocalist. Asif, who is the younger brother of Arif Khan (co-founder, who plays the sitar), was a Sufi singer working with different bands. We included him in our band and the audience loved him.

How did the band come to include so many genres? We didn't plan to create anything specific. Bollywood mashup happened because of audiences' demand. We've worked hard to bring all these aspects together and have evolved with time.

We began with Sufi music, but later realised that since we belong to Jaipur, we need to have a Rajasthani touch. When we introduced Rajasthani fusion, we ensured it didn't lose the essence of the traditional Rajasthani folk.

The reason people like

Swaraag today is because we deliver music from various genres while staying true to their origin. Our lineup depends on how open the audience is and what kind of music they prefer. Once when we were performing at a wedding, the bride's father got so emotional that she asked us to stop playing for a while. That's the power of our

How has music changed over the years? Thanks to the increasing use of tracks, people are forgetting the sounds of instruments. And, because of this very reason, the life of today's songs is short, unlike the classic Bollywood songs. So, when we perform, we make sure that the audience can hear the actual sounds of our instruments. We don't use recorded tracks, everything is played live at our shows.

digital music and recorded

How do you look at the growing avenues of indie music?

Some years ago, only certain labels dominated the market. Others didn't even get a chance to showcase their talent. Today, with the advancements in technology different platforms like YouTube and other social media, it is possible for anyone to make themselves visible. However, even with the growing acceptance of music, the quality of music is degrading as many are focusing only on the number of views and subscription.

People are busy churning out songs every month without thinking of the quality. Daily, around 50 songs are released, but nobody knows for how long these last. I get calls from aspiring artistes requesting to join the band. When I ask about their knowledge of classical music, the usual answer is that they have been practising for two-three years. Many are aping other singers and have lost their individuality. Artistes must remember that they don't have to copy others, but keep the quality of music a top priority.

The outdoor section at Dutyfree Courtyard has also been done up interestingly— each seat has a huge comfy cushion, unlike the inside.

Of good food and menu card layout

Lamb Chops

Chakhna Sampler

Chaat, Mexican Fries and Sa-

For soup, Chef Anil Adhi-

kari, who personally visits

all the guests, suggested a Veg

Manchow Soup and a Hyderabadi Paya Shorba. And both proved to be extremely refreshing and delicious. Another worth-a-try is the Hun-

Then came in the starters

Amritsari Kulcha (two bite-sized, well-cooked and lavishly spread with ghee) along with a few pieces of Paneer

Tikka, Soya Chaap, Tandoori

Paneer and Mushrooms for me, a hardcore veggie. For my non-veggie friend, the starter spread consisted of

Grilled Chicken, Grilled

Fingers.

Fish, Special Seekh

Kebab, Kung Pao

Chicken and Fish

One must admit that each dish

was cooked

to perfection

and melted in the mouth.

You can also

opt for Dahi Ke

Kebab, Sharabi

Soya Chaap,

Crispy Lotus

Stem, Honey

Chilli Water

Chestnuts,

DF Special

Prawns and

Chilli

Even as we Chicken.

starters, Chef Adhikari walked in to help us with the order for the main course.

While my friend opted for Mutton Rogan Josh and Butter Chicken, I chose a Paneer

Makhni and Malai Kofta

along with the regular breads

- rotis and naans. And of course, some green salad to were enjoying our gerian Mushroom Soup.

lami & Sausages.

RAJKUMARI SHARMA TANKHA

THOSE Lamb Chops were succulent and flavourful, weren't they? The Baigan Bharta tasted so different? And what say of the dessert Daulat Ki Chaat... quite yummy, right? These are a few common statements one gets to hear while walking in or out of a restaurant. But never have I heard anyone mentioning how impressed they were by the design of the menu card. Generally there is nothing innovative about it.

But not so at the Duty Free Courtyard. On my visit here, I heard diners gushing about the menu card! It wasn't surprising, given that the menu card of this restaurant is indeed quite unique. In fact, it is a piece of art tastefully designed, meticulously created and perfectly spread out. Each dish on offer has been first cooked, then clicked and thereafter printed on the menu card.

Duty Free Courtyard, spread over 10,000 sqft, took off a month ago and is the third one by restaurateur

Varun Puri – the other two being in Delhi and Gurugram.

The interiors are classic yet fun and the decor aesthetically pleasing to the eye. The staff is extremely courteous and ever-smiling. We, my friend and I, were greeted by manager Rohit Malik who seated us near the DJ console. Being afternoon, the DJ was missing from action, and soft music played instead.

After browsing through the menu, we ordered a Chakhna Sampler comprising popcorns, nachos, masala peanuts, chana jor garam, pita and some salad from the Nibbles section. However, there are other options like Chicken Popocorns, Nachos Corn go with it. The other options in the main course include Aloo Dum, Rawalpindi Channe, Paneer Kadhai and Baigan Bharta in the veggie section and Tawa Seekh, Andhra Fish Curry, Mutton Chettinad and Nalli Nihaari.

We rounded off the delectable meal with the famous Old Delhi's Daulat Ki Chaat eating which was just as heavenly an experience as the other delicacies. You can also order a Fried Cassata, Malting Chocolate and Dough-> your sweet tooth. All in all, an experience worth remembering.

> nuts Three Way to satiate

FB-103, Garden Galleria Mall Sector 38A, Noida Time: 12.00pm to 1.00am Meal for two: ₹1,400

DIGEST

Making merry at the 'Money Heist'

Premium bar and restaurant. The Finch, hosted 'Money Heist' event. It was based on Netflix's popular web series, Sacred Games. Along with aromatic flavours of the delectable cuisine and beverages, a host of eclectic activities were organised for the visitors. Some spontaneous offers were also given to diners. There were clues on each table and those who solved got interesting incentives. All this with a band playing the theme songs of the series in the background.

Skeyndor launches new skincare products

Skeyndor India launched its advanced skincare range, The Luxury Elixir at an event held at Hotel Eros in Nehru Place. Present on the occasion was international trainer & Holistic Aesthetician Margaret Beales, who informed the gathering about the benefits of these products. "These products are based on comprehensive scientific research to address the specific requirements of beauty-conscious women all over the world," said Ravi Mittal, Director, Skeyndor India.

SHANTANU DAVID

AFTER the central Delhi market's facelift, the many, many gastro-bars that have opened and since shuttered in Connaught Place cast a long shadow, and Station Bar is definitely sequestered among that number. Now occupying the former space held by Vault Café, Station Bar is supposed to be a terminus of sorts, through which many of the world's most significant train lines intersect. Each former vault is, well, still a vault, but the marked with famous railway lines. When we enter, this Station is surprisingly silent, with us occupying the only table. Understandably this is because the Sta-

entrances are raining winter afternoon. Having previously visited Station during the evenings, during which it's usually packed, this emptiness is all the more surprising during an tion is more an evening ha-bitué, while we visited during a damp (not dank), afternoon delight. Corresponding to our culture shock, the food menu is just as non-partisan when it comes to cuisine, and includes dishes from some

THE Hindi film mom is set in everywhere.

We go ahead and start with the Mixed Meat Platter, which comprised Tex Mex Chicken Wings, Lamb Albondigas (meatballs), Chicken Satay, Garlic Prawns, and Chicken Shish Taouk, alongside hummus and salsa. It is at this early point, in which things almost scripted.

Interiors of the Station Bar;

Our personal favourite, the garlic prawns are firm yet tender as well as pliant yet saucy, much like the second female lead in a vintage transcontinental adventure, while the Chicken Satay is unfortunately overdone to the point of being burnt, much like John Wayne having played Chinggis (Genghis, if you're being pop cultured) Khan.

Turning to the new world, the Tex Mex Wings have the characteristic tang and twang of jalapenos and Mexican Texas respectively, without committing fully to each side, while the Lamb Albondigas are tragically warm on the outside, yet (frozen) cold to through the center.

Talk about Disney villains. That being said, our ordered cocktail, Blue Train, chugged up first, and being a bar-rage of gin, tamarind, puree (presumably tomato), and Blue (counting on Curacao), all coddled, and topped, by egg white, is a potent potation. Given the strength of their cocktails, it's no worry this station is packed during the evenings.

Next, we decide to go basic and pick out our very own Fungi Misti Pizza. Apparently, the chefs took a leaf out of the afternoon clientele's book, and was missing in action, because it took us half an hour to get a pizza in a restaurant that was empty.

The end result kind of makes us kind that they had lost the pizza in the forest (or the station, or the kitchen pass). Again though, this place is a super-jumping bar (I believe they call them nightclubs), and their cocktails are pretty LIT, so maybe you should visit and form your own opinion.

> F-60, 2nd Floor, Connaught Place. Meal for two: ₹3,000 (with alcohol, and taxes) stone. She's benign, compassionate, and forever on the verge of teary sentimentality. Well, not in Navjot Gulati's Jai Mummy Di. Releasing this week, the film stars Supriya Pathak and Poonam Dhillon as a pair of raucous Delhi moms. Their kids – played respectively by Sunny Singh and Sonnalli Seygall – wish to get married, something these matriarchs are up in arms against. It's a war of the mommy superiors, set in the familiar comic world of Luv Ranjan, who has produced the film with T-Sevries.

SHILAJIT MITRA

"Jai Mummy Di is essentially Romeo and Juliet turned around," says Gulati, who has directed the short films Best Girlfriend and Jai Mata Di and is making his feature debut with this one. "It's a risky spin because on the face of it, the villain in my film is the mom. It's not the mollycoddling, kheer-khilanewali ma people are used to watching." Singh, who plays the harried son stuck between a possessive mom and a loving girlfriend, says the theme of familial conflict never falls out of fashion. "Indian moms are naturally possessive. It's a form of unconditional love that comes out in varying expressions, from anger to tears. So the bickercrafted a name in the romanticcomedy space. He recently appeared in an extended cameo in Pati, Patni Aur Woh. "Itry to be natural with my performances. I find comedy in my day-to-day observations of young people. For instance, Jai Mummy Di is the story of a normal Delhi guy. So, on the set, my focus was to just be myself," he says. Like him, Seygall is a regular in the Luv Ranjan universe. The Kolkata-raised actor made her debut in Pyaar Ka Punchnama (2011); she was also in the sequel and did a cameo in Sonu Ke Titu Ki Sweety. More recently, she was seen in the stoner comedy, High Jack, and the crime drama, Setters. In Jai Mummy Di, she plays Saanjh, a young Delhi girl trying to broker peace between the moms.

"If you remember, my character in Pyaar Ka Punchnama 2, Supriya, was in a similar situation. Her parents also did not approve of her choice. However, while Supriya didn't have the guts to rebel and had to lie and manipulate her way, Saanjh will go out of her way to make sure both families accept each other."

Luv Ranjan's films have been singled out for their male-centric gaze. Jai Mummy Di will change that. "There are no negative shades to the girl here. In fact, she emerges stronger than the boy. I'm especially happy because for the first time, I get the guy. It has never happened in my previous films," says Seygall.