What You Need to Know
Clotting Mechanism

PLATELETS

- Normally circulate in plasma. They are attracted to a damaged vessel surface where they adhere and begin to secrete biochemical mediators.
- Are chemical mediators that cause an immediate constriction of the affected vessel.
- Platelet membranes become rough and sticky, promoting the adhesion of the platelets and the development of the platelet plug.
- Platelet plug is not a clot, but it initiates the activation of the clotting cascade.

CLOTTING CASCADE

- Consists of coagulation factors—A series of steps that begins with the fibrinogen conversion to prothrombin, then to thromboplastin, and on through the series of coagulation steps or factors.
- Regardless of the cause of the injury, the clotting functions continue to follow the same common pathway—the deposition of the fibrin at the injured site and the collection of the red cells form the clot.
- At each step, the activated enzyme from the previous level initiates the action of the next level.

CLOT RETRACTION

- After the initiation and completion of the steps in the formation of a clot, a control factor must limit the activity.
- Once a clot has formed, the fibrin strands absorb the thrombin produced at the site.
- Clot begins to retract or solidify in the final stage of hemostasis.

FIBRINOLYSIN

- Proteolytic enzyme that is activated by the process of coagulation.
- Splits fibrin and fibrinogen into degradation products that will dissolve the clot.
- Dissolves small clots in the vessels, as well as removes clots from the tissues.
- Maintains balance between thrombin and fibrinolysin in the blood to promote normal coagulation and the removal of formed clots.
